

The Value of COGNITIVE ASSESSMENT

What exactly is cognitive assessment? Most parents would not be familiar with this term, much less understand its significance. But it can be great for assessing your child's potential, so read on!

1 Cognitive assessment scores reflect current cognitive profile and learning potential

These assessment scores are never an end in itself for human potential is far more complex and nuanced than what can be captured. Nevertheless, these assessment scores do reveal the cognitive skills profile and patterns of strengths and limitations in all of us.

2 A high cognitive assessment score does not equate to success but it would correlate to learning potential

Other factors such as integrity, emotional intelligence, resilience, leadership, motivation, attitude, grit, sustained effort, and more are also critical for achieving future success at school, at one's career and in life.

3 Results obtained from a cognitive assessment can be empowering

Assessment scores are useful for parents to obtain a better understanding of their children's cognitive strengths and weaknesses, explaining their learning potential or why they have not been performing in school instead of being a stigmatising label.

4 Parents can make informed decisions with deeper cognitive insights

It's not easy to make decisions on educational pathways or talent development programmes to nurture their children holistically and realistically, but cognitive assessments can help.

5 Children themselves will have greater appreciation of their cognitive strengths and limitations

They can then better leverage on or manage their learning for personalised success.

Ensure that cognitive assessments are conducted by qualified psychologists and recognised by relevant professional bodies and educational institutions. After all, the cognitive assessment test is a tool, which can only be as good as its user - the attending psychologist. Happy parenting!

TESTIMONIAL

FROM MR MARK SIM, PARENT OF 8-YEAR-OLD GIRL

I recommend the Cognitive assessment and report without reservation, it is certainly one of the most worthwhile investments I have made for my daughter so far. I now have a far better understanding of her strengths and weaknesses. Best of all, with the detailed recommendations provided, I know exactly how to support my daughter and help her to attain her fullest potential. Dr. Chan's expertise and experience helped my little girl feel absolutely at ease and she enjoyed the session immensely. A huge vote of thanks once again!
